Limitations On Pork Production

Sharp Price Decline May Result If South Produces More Pork

If the South increases pork production at the expense of production in the Mid-West, a very slight drop in Southern prices will result. If however, the increase in the South is a net addition to total production in the United States, then noticeable price declines may be expected.

These are conclusions drawn by 2 Mississippi Agricultural Experiment Station economists, Dr. Thomas E. Tramel and L. Dow Welch after a study of the pork production situation.

Many hog producers feel that technological advances are likely to cause production to shift from the Corn-Belt to the Mid-South. Others feel that states in the Mid-South will at least become self-sufficient in pork production. Research recently completed by the Mississippi Station indicates the following effects of such changes on the retail carcass value of Southern produced pork:

If ten percent of the production of leading Corn-Belt states were shifted to Kentucky, Tennessee, Arkansas, Louisiana, and Mississippi, only minor changes in retail carcass values would result. Were the latter 4 states to become self-sufficient in pork production by 1965, sharp price declines could be expected.

Should Mississippi double its 1958 production, with production elsewhere remaining at 1958 levels, retail carcass values in Miss. would decline by 79 cents per 100 weight. Increasing Mississippi production to 5 times its 1958 level would depress retail carcass values by about $3.00 per hundred-weight.

The complete report is published as Technical Bulletin 49, available on request from the Experiment Station at State College.

At the end of 1952, some 90,965,000 Americans had hospital expense insurance so that the climb to nearly 132 million at the end of 1960 meant an increase of 45.1 per cent, said the Institute.

Hospital expense benefits in 1952 amounted to $1,072,000,000 and increased by 203.2 per cent, more than quadruple the coverage growth for the same period, to reach the 1960 total of almost $3.3 billion.

Both hospital benefits and the number of persons covered by hospital insurance have increased every year since 1952, which the Institute said was the first year that health insurance benefits were broken down on an industry wide basis according to the type of service for which they paid.

County are taking advantage of good weather and available markets to harvest some of their timber products and convert it into ready cash. A well-managed farm woodland will pay a farmer handsomely returns on his investment and we all know that a farmer can usually always use some extra income.

Most landowners now realize the value and importance of timber to our economy. One dollar out of every four in Mississippi comes from the growing, harvesting and manufacturing of forest products. Yes, one-fourth of the income in our state comes from forestry. There are also many other values received from our forest lands such as prevention of soil erosion, scenic beauty, wild life habitat, protection of watersheds, and reservoirs and many other benefits.

Due to the widespread destruction of our forests in the past, the Mississippi Legislature found it necessary to pass a law governing the harvesting of timber products. This law is known as the "Forest Harvesting Act".

Every landowner and timber cutter should become familiar with the Forest Harvesting Act. A section of the law states that no one shall cut, authorize, direct or assist in the cutting for commercial purposes any pine trees under ten inches in diameter unless there is left standing on each acre of forest land being harvested, one hundred or more well distributed pine trees four inches or more in diameter or at least four ten inch trees. A landowner who wishes to follow some other plan of management is required by law to submit to the Mississippi Forestry Commission an acceptable plan on management which will assure continued productivity of the area to be harvested in lieu of the above provisions.

The Mississippi Forestry Commission is designated as the enforcing agency for this law and employees of the Commission are authorized to enter upon any and all lands to inspect the area for compliance with the law. Any person violating any of the provisions of this law is subject to prosecution by the Mississippi Forestry Commission.

The Forest Harvesting Act does not apply to the clearing of land for cultivation or pasture or other purposes such as building sites.

Second Chance
Lesson for August 13, 1961

WOULD you give a second chance to a man who has shown himself to be unreliable? That was the question that Paul and Barnabas answered differently. Indeed they were so far from agreeing that they actually split up a long-time partnership. Barnabas went off into obscurity (for we never hear of him any more) rather than go without Mark. It was a strange choice, going with young and flighty Mark rather than with the brilliant and successful Paul; but it was Barnabas' choice and he had his reasons.

PERSONNEL BOARD

The story really began several years before the great quarrel. Paul and Barnabas, a natural team if ever there was one, first picked up John Mark on their visit to Jerusalem carrying famine relief funds. He went back with them to Antioch, and was probably in church work there for some time. When Barnabas and Paul were sent out by the Antioch church as their first missionaries, they took John as an assistant. But at a place called Perga John Mark suddenly took a notion to go back to his mother (a lady of wealth) at Jerusalem. We don't know why Mark went back; no excuse is recorded. Anyhow, Perga was no place to resign; he was very much needed. Perga was in a malaria-infested district, and there is some indication elsewhere that Paul came down with it. The next leg of the journey extended across some high mountain ranges, and bandits were everywhere. It just looked as if John Mark couldn't take it.

Old Friends Part

At any rate, when the personnel board for the second missionary party (Paul and Barnabas again) met, the two older men could not agree whether to take John Mark or leave him behind. Luke tells us only that there was a "sharp contention" between the two veteran missionaries about their younger colleague; but we can imagine how the arguments went. Paul would remind Barnabas that Mark had been a quitter; Paul felt that taking him the first time was probably a mistake, but taking him the second time would be a mistake for which there could be no excuse. Give him a second chance!

Barnabas, however, was related to Mark, either as uncle or cousin. He knew the boy much better than Paul did, he felt. Maybe he knew some good reason for Mark's having come back as suddenly as he did. Barnabas could not deny that John Mark had been a spectacular failure. But he felt that John Mark would not fail twice. Paul, however, was not willing to take that chance. So after how many harsh words we do not know—the great team of Paul and Barnabas split up for good and all.

Mark Makes Good

It turned out that Barnabas was right and Paul was mistaken. John Mark made good—on the same kind of job, exactly, as the one on which he had failed before. He won the respect of distinguished leaders of the church, especially Peter, who calls him "my son," and Paul himself. Not Paul, surely? He was not a man to change his mind easily. Well, it may not have been easy for Paul to change his mind, especially to change it in public. But both publicly (to the Colossian church) and privately to Timothy, Paul praised John Mark in language he seldom used for any one. John Mark never was a brilliant young man, he was no more than an assistant from first to last; but the ablest of men need assistants, and Paul paid public tribute to the man whom once (to use modern slang) he had fired.

The split between Barnabas and Mark was painful, but it illustrates the wise providence of God. For under Paul's suspicious eye Mark might have failed again. But Barnabas believed in him—and so he succeeded. To be believed in may be the margin between failure and success.

Women Scientists Vitally Needed, March of Dimes Grantee Warns

Increasing numbers of young women must be encouraged to become medical research scientists. They are needed to make up the loss of men researchers who more and more are turning to electronics and other technical fields unrelated to the nation's health.

This is the view of Dr. Virginia Tennyson, a medical scientist herself, who sees the day near when there will be an acute and dangerous shortage of science laboratory talent unless hundreds of girls—now in high school or entering college—can be won over to science as a career.

Dr. Tennyson is an anatomist and electromicroscopist at Columbia University College of Physicians and Surgeons, New York City. Under a National Foundation March of Dimes grant, she is working today to determine what causes excess fluid in the brain of infants, one of the major birth defects (hydrocephalus) with which thousands of babies are born every year in the United States.

This dread disease leads to gross enlargement of the head, wasting away of the brain, loss of mental powers—often death. Dr. Tennyson has suggested that there is an advantage in having women in some laboratory studies.

"I think it fair to say that in some fields of scientific inquiry, women are better equipped by nature than are men. For instance, few will argue that women aren't more intuitive. In the laboratory, they are more inclined to respect a hunch, which is just another word for disciplined imagination and deduction. We women 'hunch' because we are determined to get a realistic answer."

"Then I also think," she said, "that women workers in science are inclined to be more patient than men researchers. Perhaps it's debatable, but I seem to find, too, that women are more likely to persevere, less prone to give up because of boredom and tedium."

Dr. Tennyson mentioned that the National Foundation offers today post-doctoral fellowships to promising young individuals preparing for careers in science. In addition to offering aid to prospective research scientists, The National Foundation is taking steps to interest young persons in entering the allied health professions. Under this program, the health organization has awarded almost 1,300 scholarships (each worth $2,000 if maintained for the full period of four years) in the fields of medicine, nursing, physical and occupational therapy, and medical social work.

The National Foundation offers 515 of these health scholarships each year to students in every state in the nation. Since Dr. Tennyson is dedicated to the serious task of determining the "why" of hydrocephalus, a person might conceive of her as a granite-faced zealot, oblivious to all save laboratory test tubes, reagents and microscopes.

No Scrapping, Just Napping If Room's Cool

By MARY BOWMAN

Does nap time become "scrap" time at your house on hot summer days? If so, you're not alone, Mom.

Just when youngsters need rest the most—after playing hard in the heat—they're least apt to lie down quietly for that restorative nap. What happens? They toss, turn, and fuss, then get up more exhausted and crankier than ever. Mother, who's hot and tired, too, gets edgy and impatient.

It's just too bad for Dad when he gets home.

Some mothers in my neighborhood have solved the problem nicely: they bought room air conditioners for the children's rooms. With windows closed to noise, shades drawn, and the bedrooms precooled, these mothers have no trouble getting the children to sleep soundly on the sultriest of days.

"What about noises?" I asked them. There's no problem there, it turns out. New electric room air conditioners are much quieter than the ones we used to use. One mother told me she suspects that the gentle whisper of the room cooler helps lull her child to sleep.

OUR STRENGTH

Brinkley

Establishes

Coastal Bermuda

By Hiram A. Joones,

Work Unit Conservationist

USDA - SCS

Establishing 40 acres of Coastal Bermuda is no little job for men," says Bill Brinkley. We with Bill on this, but he

the time and labor requir-

a minimum in getting this established.

Two years ago Bill planted one half-acre patch. He has this as a source of planting material this year.

He clipped the grass in Ju-

and immediately after the clip-

were cut he spread them by

of a manure spreader, over utilized and well prepared

bed. These green Coastal Bermuda stems and leaves were disk-ed lightly into the ground and packed by a mechanical roller.

Then the planted area was wet

down by a sprinkler irrigation system.

On another area purchased stol-

ons with roots were planted.

These plowed up Coastal Bermuda grass stolons were planted the same day they were removed from the ground. The same method of planting was used for these as was used with the clippings. That is, they were scattered over the fertilized and well-prepared seedbed, disked into the land, rolled with a mechanical packer, and wet down with a sprinkler irrigation system.

There is a medium to a good stand of Coastal Bermuda grass

on most of the area planted. It is too early to compare the area

planted with Coastal Bermuda

clippings and the area where

Coastal Bermuda plants having roots were used. However, it now appears that the clippings are as good as the rooted stolons in getting a good stand where the area is kept wet with a sprinkler irrigation system.

Messrs. John Burns, Paul Allen,

and Talmadge Pounders have Coastal Bermuda they use for pasture and hay. I am sure that Paul

Allen of Belmont has the largest acreage of Coastal Bermuda grass

in this area. Mr. Allen has used various methods of establishing this grass. He and Mr. Allen seem to prefer scattering the stolons

over a prepared seedbed with a manure spreader and diskings

them into the land before a rain.

Coastal Bermuda is an excellent soil conserving plant as well as one of the best known pasture plants. Those of us who work for the Soil Conservation Service commend these gentlemen for the fine

job they are doing in pasture development and in soil and water conservation.

Farm Bureau

We in Mississippi should be proud of our State Farm Bureau Organization. Mississippi Farm Bureau now has a membership of over 50,000 members. Mississippi was the fourth state in the nation to reach its quota as set up by the national office. Boswell Stephens, president of Mississippi Farm Bureau, and Dave Craig, Organizational Director, and all Farm Bureau personnel are to be commented for this fine membership and organization. However the farm people make up Farm Bureau and are the ones to be congratulated for the fine organization we enjoy here in Mississippi. Tishomingo County should be proud of the Farm Bureau Organization and membership this county has reached. Your county president and member of the State Board of Directors, Talmadge Finch, is to be commented along with the County Board of Directors for the outstanding program in Tishomingo County.

Tishomingo County was one among the first counties in the state to reach a membership of 1,000 members or more.

The Annual Tishomingo County Farm Bureau Picnic is being held today (Thursday). Each Farm Bureau member and his family is invited to attend. Your Farm Bureau Membership card will be your ticket. A program of interest has been planned along with a Barbecue supper at 6:00 p. m. In this day of changing agriculture which we are experiencing, farm people need to be organized and banded together more than ever before. Farm Bureau is the only organization we have in which the farmers can band together for a united effort in our State Legislature and in Washington.

Cotton

The outlook for a good cotton crop has greatly improved during the last week. However, the crop we make will depend on the cotton insect control program we follow during the entire month of August. We can control boll weevils by using the recommended insecticides and applying them at the proper time. Your County Agent's office will be glad to assist you on your cotton insect control program.

Miss Joann Lea Watts
is "Miss Hospitality"
The Agricultural and Industrial Board's new "Miss Hospitality" is 20-year-old Miss Joann Lee Watts of Poplarville. The five-foot-five blue-eyed blonde is a junior at Mississippi Southern majoring in home economics and speech. Her hobbies include collecting stuffed animals, painting and swimming.

Three out-of-state judges, after four days of interviews in Biloxi, selected Miss Watts to represent the state at travel shows, conventions, etc., throughout the country for the next twelve months. They named Miss Linda Ann Hobdy, Natchez, as first alternate, and Miss Dianne Carpenter, Biloxi, second alternate.

Miss Watts' first big trip as "Miss Hospitality" will be to the Veterans of Foreign Wars national convention at Miami August 20-25. Later in her reign, she will make appearances with the A&I Board's Travel Department exhibit at travel shows in Chicago, Milwaukee and New York.

Calhoun City Plant

An excellent example of the growth and development of small home-owned industries in Miss. is seen in the Caviness Woodworking Company of Calhoun City. The company, owned and operated by Jim Caviness, produces boat paddles and chair backs for chrome dinette suites. Plans are now underway to expand into the production of fishing poles, oars, and skis according to Caviness. During the past three years Caviness has been making a variety of boat paddles and distributing them through jobbers throughout the United States and into Canada. In 1960 he produced 410,000 paddles and during the first half of this year, 350,000. At present, about 30 employees are working in the plant, and approximately 200,000 feet of locally-produced lumber is used each month in the operations.

Dredging Starts On

Seaway Project

Project engineers have started dredging operations on the first two phases of the Harrison County industrial seaway. Dredging of an east access channel from the intra-coastal waterway to Biloxi Bay and a lateral channel to the Biloxi harbor is expected to be completed in November. Phase three of the project provides for development of a Bernard Bayou indus-

Special food preparation and meal combinations for weight loss may sound very tiresome. How many do you know who've gone to their old food habits and gained unwanted pounds?

Olive sizes are standardized throughout the industry. No matter what brand you buy, a certain size is always the same.

Toss some sliced, pitted ripe olives, or chopped ripe olives, in your green salad. They will add wonderful color and flavor.
