Increase In Postal Rates Approved

U. S. Court of Appeals lifted a lower court injunction and allowed a rate increase, including a cent raise on first class mail to 13 cents, which the Postal Service announced would take effect Wednesday.

A three-judge panel acted in a brief order 90 minutes after arguments by the Postal Service that the rate increase was needed to offset deficits.

Postal Service lawyer told the court that if the injunction was lifted, the higher rates could be effective immediately. But the Postal Service announced that the raise would take effect at 12:01 a.m. local time Wednesday.

A spokesman indicated that the class letter postmark rate that time could be raised to 13 cents if it was less than 13 cents postmark. The court of Appeals lifted the injunction issued by District Judge John J. Sirica which had barred the rate increase to begin last Sunday.

Attorneys told the court that if the Postal Service, which would become effective immediately, the Easter Seal drive and 17 states asked for the injunction to be continued.

The rate could be raised on its merits by the court of Appeals.

The court must still hear arguments, probably on Friday, and could uphold the rate increase.

Sirica enjoined the Postal Service Dec. 19 from raising rates on grounds that the independent agency failed to present the rate increases to its board of governors last year.

Monday's hearing, former Postmaster General J. Edward Felt said the rate increases would be blocked until the court comment on them.

The Postal Service procedures with law.

Attorneys re-argued the Postal Service following the law and there was no further delay the rate increase, including a rise from 12 cents for first-class mail. The Postal Service asked the court of Appeals to either lift Sirica's decision or uphold it until a full hearing in January.

It said unless the rate increase is effective soon, it would be forced to borrow money to roll back or ask Congress for subsidies.

The Postal Service said the Postal Service was losing $225 million a year without the increase.

The court ruled against the Postal Service, the proposed rate increase could be restored early only if the court of Appeals subsequently decides in the government's favor.

postmaster general to 1963, represented by bulk mailers and court Sirica's injunction was left intact.

"Temporary rates are a misnomer of monumental proportions," Day told the court. He said temporary rates are usually effective for nearly two years while the rate commission decides whether they should be made permanent.

Day said the Postal Service had failed to present enough facts, including specific new rate proposals, to its board of governors when it sought permission to file for permanent increases.

He said the procedure prevented "public input" into temporary rate increases which remained in effect for months.

"My point is that it's important to give emphasis to anything we can find that gives the public interest input into temporary rates," Day said.

In a companion action, 17 states, represented by assistant Maine Attorney General Donald Alexander, urged that the new rates be barred on grounds first class users were discriminated against. Alexander said first class rates would subsidize bulk mailers.

The increase averages 26 percent for all mail, but first class jumps the highest at 30 percent.

A Postal Service spokesman indicated that mail postmarked New Year's Eve must carry the new rate or risk being returned to the sender.

SALES - SALES - SALES

Sales may offer an opportunity to buy clothing at reduced prices without sacrificing quality. Or they may move you to buy things that you really do not need.

Knowing the different types of clothing sales may help you to buy sale merchandise more wisely. For example, clearance sales are held primarily to remove excess merchandise. Savings on these garments may range from 25 to 50 percent. Special purchase sales may be pre-season or post-season sales of garments. Stores buy goods at a special or reduced price in the wholesale market. Quality standards may be acceptable, but usually they are not the same as the quality of regular merchandise carried by the store. Garments may have irregularities that justify a markdown of 15 to 20 percent. Regular-stock or annual sales are probably the most reliable types for getting good quality merchandise. These clothing items are from the regular stock but are sold at a reduced price for a short time. Reductions of 10 to 15 percent are usually made. After the sale, the stock goes back to its regular price.

Anniversary sales are familiar since these are used to commemorate the founding of the store. Some regular stock is reduced in price while other items are purchased especially for this sale and will not be carried in regular stock.

Seasonal sales are regularly repeated each year, such as the August coat sales. You may get good buys at these.

Stimulative sales are intended to stimulate buying during dull or slow periods. Examples of these are the August fur sales, Back-To-School sales, Mother's Day sales, Two-For-The-Price-Of-One sales and One-cent sales.

Whatever type of sales you attend, give some thought to getting your money's worth. Dollars spent on clothing should give you a good return for your investment.

COLD DAMAGE TO LANDSCAPE PLANTS

Perhaps the best general recommendation for pruning ornamental landscape plants is to wait until you are certain of the extent of the damage, then prune back to live wood. In some cases, this may be a matter of several weeks after the freeze. When it is evident that extensive damage has been done, the plant should be cut back to live wood.

A knife or a thumbnail can be used to scratch back and determine if the shrub has been killed all the way down the main trunk or main stems. Often the damage is the outside twigs and branches, and the plant will need only a light clipping back.

If the cambium layer, just beneath the bark of the stem or trunk shows discoloration, this is a sign that the plant needs cutting back below such damage. Any bark which has split or cracked should be removed by cutting below the damage. Crepe myrtle, Anthony Waterer Spirea, Althea, Butterfly Bush and highbush cranberry are among the shrubs which bloom on this year's growth of wood. It is possible to prune this group after a heavy freeze and still have flowers from them in the summer. Tea roses should be pruned to remove dead wood after it is evident. If the rose is of a vigorous variety, it will make sufficient growth during the summer even if it is killed back to the ground.

Evergreen plants as holly, pine, spruce and laurel usually are injured by sudden changes in temperature. In the earliest stages, freeze injury is evident as "scorching" of the leaves at the tips. On narrow-leaf evergreens the needles are browned entirely. The twigs are brittle and snap when bent.

If there is any doubt that twigs and branches have been killed it is best to wait a few weeks until such damage will be easily seen. At that time, prune the plant back to live wood.

Annual and perennial flowers which have suffered cold or frost damage will undergo a dwarfing or crippled stage of growth. Some of them may remain permanently stunted. Such plants should be cut back at the tips, as soon as the extent of cold damage is recognizable. Any bulbs which were in bloom at the time of the freeze should be left alone until the entire top growth has died to the ground. Then dig and cure before replanting.

Youth Turned On By 4-H Electric Program

CHICAGO—Electricity means power.

That power may be 1,000 kilowatts for a locomotive, 100 watts for a lamp, or only a tiny fraction of one watt picked out of the air by a radio transmitter. But every day the energy generated by electricity vitally affects man and his environment.

The why's and how's of electricity are being explored by 122,000 young people from 9 to 19 in the national 4-H electric program. In its 40th year of sponsorship by Westinghouse Electric Corporation, the learn-by-doing program helps 4-H'ers fathom the mysteries of this important energy source.

Understanding electricity How electricity heats, what makes motors run, how electric bells and buzzers work, how cells and batteries operate, are some of the topics examined.

In activities supervised by the Cooperative Extension Service, 4-H members acquire electrical safety skills aimed at preventing personal injury or property damage. And 4-H'ers learn to play a part in easing the energy crisis by using electricity efficiently in the home.

Practical 4-H electric projects range from the relatively simple, like making a circuit board or rewiring a lamp, to the progressively more complex—building a crystal radio or radio voice transmitter, for example.

Some of last year's winners of national college scholarships offered by Westinghouse built an oscilloscope (an instrument that works much like a television set), designed stage lighting for theatrical productions, and wired an electric fence and heating lamps on the family farm.

Awards for achievement This year, in addition to six $800 national scholarships, Westinghouse will provide an expense-paid trip to the 54th National 4-H Congress, Nov. 30-Dec. 4 in Chicago, to one top program member from each state. Medals of honor will go to as many as four 4-H'ers in each county.

Winners are chosen by the Extension Service on the basis of their records of accomplishment. Awards are arranged and announced by the National 4-H Service

REPORT FROM CONGRESSMAN WHITTEN

Congressman Jamie L. Whitten (D. Miss.), Ranking Member of the House Appropriations Committee and Chairman of the Agriculture and Related Agencies Appropriations Subcommittee, presented to the House, before it recessed, 6 resolutions disapproving deferrals. These resolutions from Mr. Whitten's Committee recommended to the House that they disagree with the actions of the President and the Department of Agriculture in withholding funds.

The President had bid to slash $181 million from six rural programs. Mr. Whitten told the Members that the Committee on Appropriations had recommended a reduction and the Congress had reduced the Agriculture and related agencies annual appropriations by $2 billion below the President's budget. He further stated, "The President did not have one word of criticism then when he signed the bill."

The House adopted the Resolutions and the funds were restored. This was the 21st time Congressman Whitten's Committee had restored money for Agricultural Conservation Program. The House action also prevented a $50 million cut in rural water and waste disposal grants; $22,500,000 was returned for watershed and flood prevention operations. Resource conservation and development had $4,960,000 returned to its program. The Appalachian Fruit Crop Laboratory and the Fleming Key Animal Import Center funds were also reinstated.

WHY NUCLEAR POWER PLANTS?

Economy. Although a nuclear power plant costs slightly more to construct (because of the many built-in safeguards), it's more economical to operate than a coal-fired plant.

Much lower fuel cost is the primary factor, over four times lower than fuel costs for a coal-fired plant. And one pound of nuclear fuel contains as much energy as 75 tons of high grade coal. So you can see why nuclear is indeed a very economical way to produce electricity.

In the decades ahead, nuclear plants will be significant in holding down the cost of your electric power.

In Memory

IN MEMORY OF
MILBRA CUMMINGS MOON
Six months have gone, we still recall
The precious place she filled,
Her loving tender smile so sweet
Will always be a thrill.

Her life was short upon this earth,
A short span of thirty-one years,
We can't forget her birthday (today, December 30th)
As our eyes are filled with tears.

She suffered so, but was so brave,
As her life seeped away,
But God said "Come on Milbra go home
With me to Stay."

We miss her so, no tongue can tell,
Her life was just beginning,
We never dreamed how short the time,
Her sweet life would be ending.

He took her home to be with him,
To rest eternally,
It gives us faith to struggle on,
That your sweet face we'll see.

Life seems so hard, as time goes by,
I miss her more each day,
But God tells us in His Word,
There'll be a brighter day.

Her little girl is left behind,
She feels so sad and alone,
But if she lives for Jesus
She'll meet "Mamma" in a better home.

When evening sun is sinking,
And we look into the west,
We thank God for everything, and know Milbra is at rest.

So give us strength again we pray,
As through this world we go,
That we can meet the world and smile,
And always feel, when comes my time,
I'll be ready to go.

Fixing the blame won't fix the fix we're in.

Right now, a major problem in Mississippi and the rest of the nation is the energy shortage. But spending valuable time finding fault will not help find answers to the problem.

Get a fix on the problem.

The natural gas shortage is the result of the nation's having used this depletable resource for several years at a far faster rate than gas producing companies have been able to add new reserves. The decline in available supply now has reached the point that widespread plant closings and other severe dislocations may occur this winter in some parts of the country.

Fortunately, we do not expect any such severe results in Mississippi or other parts of United's direct service area in the Gulf South this winter. But the problem is serious enough, and the future uncertain enough, that all of us must work together to reduce the impact of the shortages.

Service on priority basis.

In times of peak demands and scarce supply, we must allocate available gas supplies on a priority basis. United, like all interstate pipeline companies, delivers gas to customers in accordance with a system of priorities ordered by the Federal Power Commission.

The highest priority is for use of gas in homes, schools, hospitals and commercial establishments (so-called domestic or "human needs" customers). The next priority is for use of gas in industry as a raw material (so-called feedstock or process gas). The last category is for other industrial uses of gas by both small and large users, with minimum levels established so that small users are the least affected.

United expects to have sufficient supply available this winter to meet all the needs of the first two categories (gas for human needs and processing purposes), and to provide some quantity of gas to all industrial users in United's Gulf South service area.

As in past years, however, there will be substantial curtailment of gas deliveries to larger industrial users, notably for such relatively low efficiency uses as boiler fuel for generation of electricity. This type of industrial gas curtailment will increase somewhat over last year.

Moreover, in the event of a severely cold winter which substantially increases the heating load requirements, or in the event of severe storms or other disasters which interfere with the collection of gas supply from the fields for an extended period, there is a possibility that still deeper curtailments will be necessary.

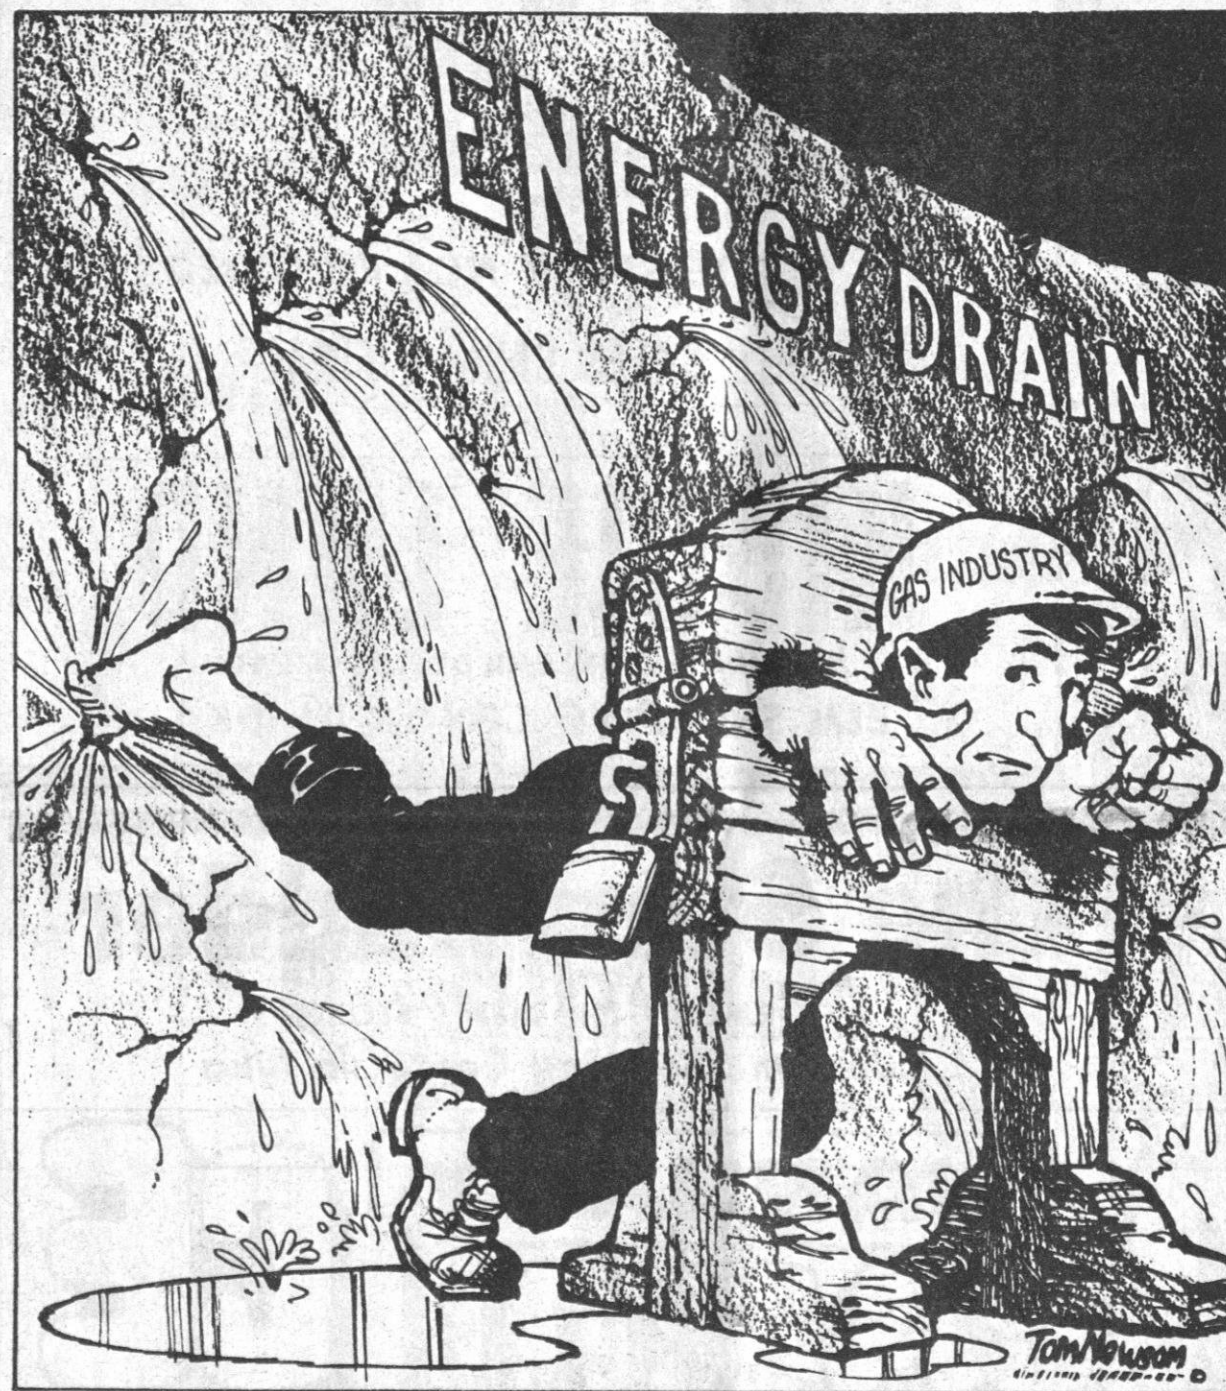

Other parts of the country will be more severely affected by the natural gas shortage this winter than will Mississippi and other states in United's direct service area. Nevertheless, gas curtailments will be deep in Mississippi and the Gulf South and we must all do everything we can to reduce the impact of the shortage.

Conservation will help.

A program of conservation in which everyone can participate is an important first step in overcoming the impact of the shortage.

It's simple mathematics. Since there's only a certain amount of natural gas available, every cubic foot we consume in the home is a cubic foot that won't be available for industrial uses.

Of course, the opposite is also true. Every cubic foot saved at home is a cubic foot that could be made available to industry. So, conserving gas around the house shouldn't seem so unimportant. Besides saving money, it can save some people from temporary job layoffs in the bargain. Maybe it isn't your job, but for sure, it's one of your neighbor's.

And it really won't put you out that much, either. All you have to do to really help is turn your thermostat down to 68° in the day and 64° at night while you're asleep. Plus check to see that your doors and windows are closed and sealed tightly and that your attic and outside walls are well insulated.

If everybody in Mississippi would do just that much, we estimate human needs consumption could be reduced by 15 percent and that would help to keep more of Mississippi's industry at work this winter.

Some industries can burn oil.

In the past, that's just what industry has done, as have the electric power plants. Whenever it was necessary to curtail the industrial use of natural gas in the past (you see, this isn't a new problem... it's been with us in some parts of the country for over 25 years), the affected business bought standby equipment and switched over to burning an alternate fuel which was usually oil or coal.

But that was when oil was abundantly available and before the OPEC embargo had driven the price up above $12 a barrel for imported crude. In equivalent terms, a "barrel" of energy in the form of natural gas at the wellhead would cost about $2. So now, even if the affected industry can get all the oil it needs, it'll have to pay a lot more for the fuel than if it could go on burning natural gas.

This means that industrial gas customers—and electric utility customers when power plants must pass these increased fuel costs on to them—are now bearing higher energy costs for reasons totally beyond the control of the gas supplier. As long as oil prices stay so high and gas remains in short supply, this problem will remain. We wish just as much as our customers that there was something we could do about the foreign oil situation—and the other factors which cause hardship during the current gas shortage.

We're doing our best.

One of Mississippi's best bets to get more natural gas through interstate pipelines in the foreseeable future is United Gas Pipe Line Company. We're vitally concerned with what happens to the people of Mississippi, and we're a major interstate pipeline supplier bringing large amounts of gas into Mississippi.

United Gas is a 50-percent partner in Sea Robin Pipeline Company's $160 million, 300-mile pipeline system transporting gas from Federal waters in the Gulf to Sea Robin's compressor station at Erath, Louisiana. Sea Robin is capable of handling 1.2 billion cubic feet of gas daily, and more than 25 producers are connected to Sea Robin's pipeline network.

United is working to bring more gas in from the Federal waters offshore Texas, too. United is an equal partner with three other companies seeking FPC approval to build a $343 million, 200-mile pipeline network to tap important new gas reserves up to 100 miles off the Texas coast for delivery to onshore points in the Gulf South.

In recent years, a substantial and growing part of United's gas supply has come from the Federal waters of the Gulf of Mexico, the area which is expected more than any other to provide new gas reserves in the next few years. This magnifies the importance of United's major efforts to enlarge its purchases of gas from producers in the Gulf of Mexico.

Right now, much of the gas United is able to obtain in the Gulf waters is delivered for use in Mississippi. United is making great efforts to attach these new supplies, but the help and cooperation of everyone in Mississippi is vital.

Let's face the facts squarely.

Fixing the blame for the nation's energy woes contributes nothing to the solution.

Looking back, we know that the government has kept the price of gas too low at the wellhead to provide an incentive for speculative drilling. We know that a dual price structure has taken needed gas away from interstate pipelines. We know that the desirability of this clean-burning fuel—particularly during a time of growing environmental concern—has increased gas demand far beyond anyone's projections. Despite our best efforts, we know that we simply can't get enough gas now to meet all our customer needs.

We all wish the energy shortage would go away, but it won't.

The problem remains and it's up to all of us to solve it.

We can't do it without you, and you can't do it without us.

Thanks. And no thanks.

One thing we can all be thankful for is that most state and local officials in Mississippi and the Gulf South not only understand the problem, but are working night and day trying to help find solutions. Without them, the situation could be worse.

Meanwhile, back in Washington, the picture's not quite so bright. Despite the yeoman efforts of Senators and Representatives from energy-producing states, and some others, Congress so far has not come to grips with the problem.

We are confident that common sense eventually will light the way to a solution equitable for all of us.

We're not the gas company. We're your gas company.

More than 2,000 United employees live and work in the five-state Gulf South area. Whatever happens to the people of this region happens to us. We have a tremendous investment here in time, people and money. And we're committed to helping build a better future for us all.

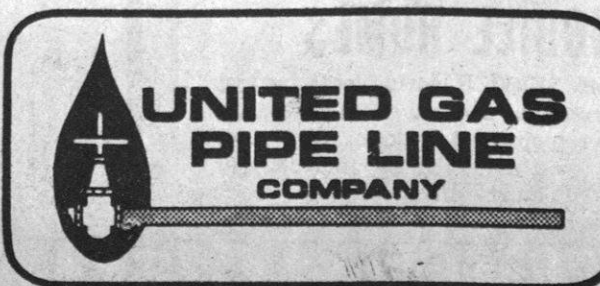

The point is, at United Gas we're a lot more than just concerned bystanders.

Get a fix on the answer.

Public officials, industrial leaders and consumers are coming to the obvious conclusion: a combination of energy conservation and development based on sound economic incentives is the energy policy needed now and in the future.

LETTERS to EDITOR

OPERATION TOWNLIFT -
IUKA

Would you like to see all of downtown Iuka remodeled, using the same theme as the Guaranty Bank? The bank will be a beautiful and welcome addition to the downtown area but as a concerned citizen I really don't want the whole downtown to copy the bank. It is modern and I am wondering how long "modern" is going to survive. Our downtown has survived and been loved and looked at for almost 100 years - and I agree the time has come to "update". The town is looking dilapidated instead of "old". It has lost much of its beauty and charm from neglect, but that does not mean it needs a complete redesigned "facelift". We don't need to destroy and modernize - just restore and beautify.

Look UP Iukans; look at the beauty of these old buildings! See the fretwork - the carved and ornate cornices, the ornamental ironwork grills, the different shapes of the "false fronts"? These designs are history and heritage and we're proud of our uniqueness. Let's enlarge on our being different and preserve what we have rather than destroy.

In the beginning of our restoration we could concentrate our immediate attention on resurfacing the sidewalks and gutters and getting rid of some of those dilapidated looking storefronts. I like what W. S. Brown & Co. has accomplished, as well as Brown Insurance Agency, the doctors and lawyers offices and I particularly like what Bobby Sue and Frank Burns have done to the old Hiatt store; the oldness is there with only the glass front restored to a more beautiful era - "1700 Williamsburg". (Williamsburg didn't wrap a modern mall-like "walk" around that town - they restored and beautified what was there and its been there for over 200 years and is still enjoying tremendous success as a tourist center.)

We need to work out the traffic problem in downtown Iuka - your car and life are in danger when you enter Front Street from any direction on Saturday. Perhaps we could have "off Front Street only" parking with good results, utilizing Jay Bird Park and the area immediately across the tracks for off-street parking.

I've heard much criticism of the railroad - the danger is certainly there and MUST be controlled - but the railroad is a part of our heritage as our town came into being because of it. Perhaps our restoration should be around the fact that we were originally a railroad town. Think how nice it would be to restore the old train station and use as offices for the Chamber of Commerce and other civic organizations. The Railroad Company would probably lease the old station house to the city for very little money. There are Federal monies available for restoration of towns that we need to investigate and be INFORMED about through out radio and newspaper medias. I'd like to know what the "catches" are to these "Instant" Federal funds.)

The people now in our town and others to come will all have their own ideas on what our town should look like when its modernized. No one as yet has asked the people who live here what they think. The people who live in Iuka and the surrounding areas are the ones who should be MOST concerned and heard from. You are the people who will continue to live here after the "planners" and architects are long gone to advise other towns - and your children will live here after you, as you are here after your parents and grandparents. Do you want to preserve and restore our downtown area as it was initially or do you want it to look like any other modern small town U.S.A.? Write the Tishomingo County News and tell them what YOU think.

TISHOMINGO SPORTS

The Tishomingo Bulldogetts traveled to Somerville, Tenn. Tuesday night to play Fayette Ware with the understanding that they would play by Mississippi rules. It was not but minutes before the game began they were told they would play by Tennessee rules. (Three offensive and three defensive players who cannot cross mid-court). The Bulldogetts had never played by these rules before and didn't completely understand them.

As the game got underway it was apparent from the start that even though the Bulldogetts played their hearts out there was no competing with a team when they had to play by their rules. The Bulldogetts lost by 15 points to Fayette Ware (60-45), but the Bulldog fans will always remember the circumstances of this loss.

The Fayette Ware Warriors proved the game was not over until the final gun Tuesday night when they cut the Bulldog's 19 point halftime lead to six points with 5:01 left on the clock.

The first half had been all 'Bulldog' with everything going their way. The Warriors just couldn't seem to do anything right and the Bulldogs cashed in on several turnovers and led at halftime 46-27.

The Bulldogs found rougher going in the second half. They just couldn't seem to score and the Warriors just couldn't seem to miss. The third quarter was dominated by the Warriors as they scored 13 points to the Bulldog's 4.

The 1800 opposing fans were on their feet by this time making all the noise they could and the pressure was tremendous on the Bulldogs. When a Warrior scored on a baseline shot to bring them within 6 points (54-48) Tishomingo called time out. It was during this time out that the Bulldogs must have settled down. They came back with a quick 2 points and played good basketball the rest of the game and ended up with a ten point win (64-54).

Here it is half way through the basketball season and so far the Bulldogs and Bulldogetts have had a great first half.

The Bulldogetts have seven wins and five losses thus far. They have scored a total of 556 points to their opponents 405. The five games they lost they were downed by an average of only seven points while they averaged sixteen points better than their opponents in the seven games they have won. Their free throw percentage is 49%.

The Bulldogs have thirteen wins and no losses. They have scored a total of 804 points to their opponents 576. This is an average spread of 18 points. Two of the games they have given them the Belmont Tournament for the fourth year row. Their free throw percentage stands at 65%.

The teams have six regular games left on the schedule with five tournaments. The will play in the Corinth Robin Tournament starting 1st. All in all both teams playing great basketball, we, the fans, wish them all luck the rest of the season.

Those spending Christmas Day with Mr. and Mrs. Junior Adkins were: Mr. and Mrs. Bill Branum, Peggy and Brian Whitfield, Mr. and Mrs. Edna Hammock, Vanessa and Martin of Counce, Tenn.; Mr. and Mrs. Jimmy Pruitt, Jimmy Lee and Scotty Ray, of Cherokee, Ala.; Mr. and Mrs. Joe Parker and Stacy Paul, Mr. and Mrs. Junior Parker, of South Crossroads; visited the Adkins on Friday night.

Mr. and Mrs. Junior Adkins, Mr. and Mrs. Joe Parker and Stacy had supper with Mr. and Mrs. Jimmy Pruitt and boys Friday night.

Mr. and Mrs. Alvin Carlisle, Mr. J. J. Dexter, Mr. and Mrs. David Williams, of Counce, Tenn., all visited Mr. and Mrs. Bill Branum and William, Peggy and Brian Whitfield Christmas Eve.
