Investigation Into Vote Certification

The certification of the results of the second primary vote recount in the race for 1st District Supervisor has been contested, according to David Bonds, Chairman, Democratic Executive Committee.

A petition was filed September 9 requesting the Democratic Executive Committee to investigate and review their earlier decision. According to Bonds, an informal meeting was held Monday, September 14, at which time the committee reaffirmed the previous decision.

If those involved still wish to contest the decision, a formal meeting will be held Saturday, September 19, at which time an appeal can be made and the case will be turned over to the Circuit Court, Mr. Bonds said.

According to Circuit Court Clerk, Lamar Rutherford, the Chief Justice will appoint a judge who will decide if the certification stands or if it will be overturned.

1988 Wheat Program Announced

The 1988 wheat program will require an acreage reduction by farmers who participate, according to David Wilson, County Executive Director.

"The acreage reduction for wheat is the same as last year--27.5 percent," Wilson said. "This means that program participants will be required to maintain an acreage conservation reserve area equal to 37.93 percent of their planted acres."

Wilson also provided details on other provisions of the '88 wheat program, recently announced by USDA.

Producers who participate in the program will be eligible for price support loans at $2.17 a bushel and target price protection at $4.29 per bushel

Handling An Injured Animal

A dog that has been injured is frightened, confused and in pain. While the animal probably wants help, he can't be sure that those around him don't just want to hurt him more.

Even a beloved master may become the victim of a vicious bite if the proper precautions aren't taken.

The first thing to be done when moving an injured animal is to tie its mouth shut with gauze, string, even a necktie. Wrap it around the mouth, then under the muzzle again, and finally around the neck, where the material is tied in a bow knot.

This does not interfere the animal's with breathing. You are wrapping the material around the muzzle, not covering the nostrils

If nothing else is available, a belt can be looped over the animal's muzzle. But this must be held tight during the en-

THE BATTLE OF IUKA

by G.W. Dudley Editor The Vidette 1896

(Editor's note: Through the courtesy of the Dudley family and Mrs. Lyla Merrill McDonald the following is Dudley's account of the Battle of Iuka which appeared in the July 4, 1957 Centennial Edition of The Vidette)

Through courtesy of the Dudley family I give Dudley's account of the battle: The position of the two armies on the 18th of September 1862 was as follows: The Federal Column under Rosecrans had reached Jacinto, and preparations were being made for an early forced march on the road to luka. General Ord's command under the immediate supervision of Gen. Grant skirmished all day on the Burnsville road, making demonstrations as through an attack was imminent. On the Confederal side General Maury's division and two brigades of Gen. Little's cavalry stationed in a steep division were in line of battle on the Burnsville road, while Armstrong's Cavalry brigade was occupied in guarding the flanks. General Price's headquarters were in the building occupied by Mrs. Lyle on the south side of town and on the road leading west into Jacinto road. The plans of the federal commander seemed to be working admirable. The confederate General seems to have had no suspicion of an attack from any direction except Burnsville. He had not the slightest information of the massing of Rosecrans force at Jacinto. All his cavalry except Falkner's regiment of This infuriated the Federal Partisian Rangers and an unknown battalion or squadron was in the flanks looking toward Burnsville. Falkner's regiment was near Burnt Mills on the Fulton road, while the battalion before referred to was somewhere south of luka, tho this command showed up next day on the Jacinto road. Little, the right arm of Price.

In addition to the battery at the forks of the road the Federals had placed a battery at or near the Yow house. On swept the Confederate line of battle, brave men fell at every step. As the Confederates advanced it obstructed the fire of the St. Louis Battery which was forced to cease firing, from danger of hitting their own men, but the Federal artillery redoubled its fire. Whitfield's Texas Legion covered both sides of the main road. Reaching the summit of the hill the road veers almost at right angles toward the east. It was here that the line of brave Texans first came under the enemy's artillery and infantry fire. They poured a volley into the regiment of the enemy immediately in front of the 48th Indiana, which cause the latter to give way.

The Third Texas was on their left, immediately in front of the Federal Battery. It was evident that the battery must be taken or else the two regiments would soon be swept from the earth. Col Whitfield ordered a charge, in a moment the whole line swept forward. At the crest of the hill they were greeted with a storm of grape and cannister that tore a big gap in their ranks but did not check their advance. Before the few surviving Federal artillerists could reload the Texans were upon them and tinct, thus perished Henry W. 40th Miss. The ambulances were set to work at once bringing the wounded to town where every home was made a hospital for their reception and every possible attention given them by the citizens.

The 1st and 3rd Brigades of General Little's division reached the battlefield just as the battle closed, had they reached the field an hour earlier a partial victory would have been converted into an overwhelming triumph and the destruction of Rosecran's army. Too late to join in an aggressive movement they relieved the brave men who had borne the brunt of the terrible struggle. All through the battle General Rosecross and other officers strained their ears to hear the report of artillery on the Burnsville road as the column under Ord advanced but they listened in vain. There is a tradition that Grant was drunk in Burnsville and incompetent to command. Grant says himself he did not hear the noise of battle at luka. This seems an incredible statement.

We now return to the battlefield where two fresh brigades of Confederates had relieved the battle scarred the veterans. Pickets were pushed out in front of the battery while the main line of battle was retired to the rear. Here details were made and set to work, ostensible engaged in fortifying the line and preparing for a renewal of hostilities but in reality to deceive the Federal commander, for Price had decided upon a prompt retreat. Two reasons conspired to make such action imperative. In the first place he had received word from General Van Dorn to join him at Ripley where they would consolidate for an attack upon the Federals at Corinth. In the second place his command was unable to cope with combined armies of Rosecrans and Ord, so even before the smoke of battle had lifted preparations for a retreat were underway. The wagon train was gotten in readiness as soon as possible and begun moving down the Fulton road, guarded by calvary. By 3:30 o'clock in the morning every wagon was on the way. There was some firing between the pickets of the two armies during the night and few men were killed and wounded. Just before daylight the Confederate pickets were drawn in and the whole Confederate line of battle was quietly moved back and took up the line of retreat. When daylight came Federals found everything quiet. A battery was brought forward and threw shells into the town, one luka Springs Hotel (another went through the roof of the Merrill home). As they advanced into town they were met by a deputation of citizens headed by Mr. Samuel Dewoody who asked for protection of private property (no men of military age were left in town. The citizens who asked for protection were old and infirm. Mr. Dewoody carried a sheet tied to a broom handle.) How about the Confederates? General Herbert says that his brigade went in with 1774 men and the 4th (Martin's) had 1405 making a total 3,179. Not only were the Federal forces greater in number but they occupied a chosen position of great natural strength.

LOSSES

Federal authorities claim the Confederate loss was much greater than their, also much heavier than given in the Confederate official report. Following is a detailed statement of Gen. Herbert: 40th Miss., 10 killed, 39 wounded. 21 mission; Strength 314; 7th Ark., 2 killed, 12 wounded, 3 missing, strength 109; 3rd Texas, 22 killed, 74 wounded, strength

Total, 63 killed, 305 wounded, 40 missing, strength 1774. Rosecrans gave the Federal loss at 144 killed, 598 wounded and 40 missing. The Federal field hospital was about one half mile back of the battlefield.

Following is a partial list of Confederate regimental commanders engaged in the battle: 3rd La., Col. Gilmore; 3rd Texas, Col. Mabry; 4oth Miss., Col. W. B. Colbert; 1st Texas Legion, Col. J. W. Whitfield;37th Ala.; Col. Dowdle; 36th Miss., Col Witherspoon; 37th Miss., Col. Robt. McLain; 38th Miss., Col. F.W. Adams. General Little was buried in Mrs. Alexander's yard. After the war his widow had the remains taken to Baltimore, MD.

He, at once, sought out General Little whom he found about 100 yards to the left on the road, telling him to bring forward the other two brigades at once. Perceiving that the 48th Indiana, which had fled before the first fire of Whitfield's men, had now partially rallied, and was advancing on his right, Capt. Whitfield acting as major, ordered three companies to drive them back, which they did. In this fight Lieut. W. W. Townsend shot Col. Eddy commanding the Indiana regiment. Along the settlement road, which led to the Yow home, were stationed the 4th Minn., 17th lowa, and 10th lowa regiments. The attach on this portion of the Federals' line was made by the 36th and 38th Mississippi regiments of the 4th (Martin's) Brigade. The 17th lowa stampeded and fled at the first fire, but the 10th Iowa under Co. Perczell supported the battery with great bravery and being favored by position were enabled to drive back the Confederates. of this village, about two hours before dark yesterday and had a sharp fight until night closed in. General Ord was to the north with an armed force of about 5000 men and had some skirmishing with the rebel pickets. This morning the fight was General renewed by Rosecrans who was nearest the town; but it was found that the enemy had been evacuating during the night; going south. Generals Hamilton and Stanley with cavalry are in full pursuit. This will no doubt break up the enemy and possible force them to abandon much of their artillery. The loss on either side in killed and wounded is from four to five hundred. The enemy's loss in arms tents etc. will be large We have about two hundred and fifty prisoners.

I have reliable intelligence that, it was Price's intention to move east of the Tenn. In this he had been thwarted. Among the enemy's loss are Gen. Little killed and Gen. Whitfield wounded. I cannot speak too highly of the energy and skill displayed by Gen. Rosecrans in the attack and of the endurance of the troops. General Ord's command showed untiring zeal but the direction taken by the enemy prevented them from taking active part as they desired. Price's force was about eighteen thousand.

U. S. Grant, Major-General

In the battle of luka, Drummajor Patterson carried the colors of the regiment. During the progress of the battle he advanced in front of the regiment too far, discovering which, he began to fall back Rosecran's headquarters. While attempting to execute this mission he was killed. and the next morning these beautiful colors were found on the field of battle, amid the dead and wounded, beside the cold and silent form of the Federal soldier. The regiment felt bitterly the loss of their flag, as only brave men can feel such a misfortune.

What tales home where Rosecrans had might not this blade of shining steel relate of deeds under strict guard for the of valor done by its brave remainder of the time the wearer for the lost but sacred cause! This we do know, that no hand carried sword more stainless, nor braver man went forth in defense of brighter land or grander cause.

The sword presented to Col. Stone when captain of the luka Rifles, was bent at the first battle of Manassas. The one now in the possession of his family is therefore the second used by him during the civil war.

Col. Stone had been to Mississippi for recruits, and on his return to Virginia, the war center, was captured with 800 other returning soldiers, at Salisbury, N. C., April 12, 1865, by Stoneman's command. The Confederates were taken to Blowing Rock and then turned over to Kirk. The prisoners were plundered by his men, private letters, pictures, nor Bible being spared. One of the number says that they became so accustomed to the pilfering by the enemy, that he saw one of those soldiers turn a man over with his foot and search his pockets without rousing him.

It was in the midst of such scenes that Col. Stone was heard to say, "If I am ever released, I will fight as I have never fought before!" Wilson of the raid fame, came up with the prisoners as they were being marched from place to place; one of his men, Morris W. Le Shure, now of Ohio, secured Col. Stone's sword, and has kept it for nearly thirty-eight years. Although Mr. Le Shure does not fully explain how he, a private soldier, took the sword of an officer, he describes Col. Stone in a general way and identifies a picture of him as that of the owner of the sword, thus leaving hardly any doubt that it is indeed Col. Stone's. It should be remembered that this occurred about the close of the war, and many inexplicable things were done by Federal soldiers at that time. Col. Stone advertised for his sword many years ago, desiring if possible to obtain possession of it, but received no tidings of it. Mr. Le Shure says he saw the advertisement, but not wishing to part with the sword kept silent. With advancing years, however, his feelings changed, and a desire to live by the golden rule prompted him to write to the secretary of state of Mississippi. inquiring for Col. Stone or any member of his family, that he might return what to them would be a priceless treasure. This act on his part lead to a correspondence which resulted in the sword's being forwarded to Mrs. John M. Stone, who, it is needless to say, will guard it with most tender care.

It was a generous act on Mr. Le Shure's part. The value of war relics increases with time, and had he chosen, the possessor could have sold this sword to a collector for a nice sum. His was the act of a friend, not a foe. His spirit is shown in this conclusion to a private letter:

Under the sod and the dew. Awaiting the judgement day;

Love and tears for the Blue. Tears and love for the Gray.

The battle of luka took place on the 19th of September, 1862. It was fought by a handful of the troops of General Rosecrans against half the army of General Price. Grant was only a few miles away, but although commander-in-chief, he knew nothing of the harddest-fought battle of the Civil War until it was over. before One morning daylight while camped in the woods near Jacinto half expecting to be attacked, we heard that Price's army was in signal for them to attack also, luka, some eighteen miles away, and that if we would hurry there and attack from one side, General Grant, with Ord's troops, would attack from another side. How eagerly the regiment made the forward march on that beautiful autumn day! The woods were in their fairest foliage, and it seemed too lovely a day for war and bloodshed. The bugles played occasionally as the men hurried along, but not a shot was fired. No noise like war fell on the soldiers' ears as they tramped over the beautiful country road toward the Tennessee River. They had time for reflection as they marched, and they knew now they were going to battle. There had been no time for letters or farewells, and each thought the other one, not himself, most likely to fall in the coming engagement. There were only 482 of my little regiment now marching there, hoping, almost praying, the enemy might only wait.

amoung the autumn leaves! It was just two o'clock when the regiment ran on to the army of the enemy, lying in line right across the road close to luka. My own regiment was in the advance. Instantly it, too, was in line of battle across that road, and in a few minutes absolutely the fiercest little conflict of the war began. Our brigade was fearfully outnumbered. Rosecrans, had ten thousand soldiers within five miles of the battlefield, yet let three or four small regiments and a battery do all the fighting. Ten miles away, in another direction, lay General Grant and General Ord, with many other thousands, as silent as if paralyzed. An unlucky wind blew, they said, and the sound of our cannon, that was to have been the was unheard by them. Charge after charge was made upon our little line, and the Eleventh Ohio Battery, which the regiment was protecting, was taken and retaken three times. There were no breastworks, yet that one little brigade of Hamilton's division stood there in the open and repulsed assault after assault. It was the lowa, the Missouri, and the Ohio boys against the boys of Alabama and Mississippi, and the grass and leaves were covered with the bodies in blue and gray. Not Balaklava, nor the Alma, saw such fighting. It was a duel to the death. For hours the blue and the grav stood within forty yards of each other and poured in sheets of musketry. Every horse of the battery at the left of my regiment was killed, and every gunner but one or two was shot and lying among the debris. No battery in the whole four years' war bayoneted clear behind the line of Company B, where he had broken through to seize the flag of my regiment. That night the enemy slipped away, leaving hundreds and hundreds of his dead and wounded on the field. With a few lanterns our men then went about and tried to gather up the wounded; the dead were left till morning. There: were 782 Union men lying there in their blood that long night, 608 of them out of a single small brigade. While mothers and sisters at home were praying for the safety of these dear ones at the front, their spirits that night were leaving their torn bodies in the dark and ascending heavenward. Five of my eight messmates of the day before were shot. It was not a question who was dead, or wounded, but who was not. Fifteen officers of our little half regiment were dead or wounded. The enemy lost more than one thousand men in trying to destroy that single brigade and its Ohio battery. The burying party the next morning found nineteen dead Rebels lying together at one place. At another spot 182 Rebel corpses lay in a row covered by tarpaulins. The enemy had not had time to bury them.

Rushing forward, the Lieutenant seized the colors, shouting, "Follow me, boys!" and ran rashly into the midst of the enemy's line. He was captured, with the colors, by the foe. WHEAT PLANTING Wheat producers in Tishomingo County may tend to overract to last year's poor planting season and plant early this year. Here is a word of caution. Planting too early can cause as many problems as planting too late.

Early wheat planting encourages the build up of hessian fly, aphids and wheat diseases. Late plantings increase the risk of stand failures and reduced yields if there are long, rainy periods in the fall.

Get your soils prepared, fertilized and limed on time, and be ready to plant when the optimum time arrives. Here are the suggested planting dates: north Mississippi, October 1 to November 15; central Mississippi, October 15 to November 25; south Mississippi, November 1 to December 10.

You will generally have fewer problems if you do your wheat planting toward the latter part of the suggested planting period. If you have had truble with hessian flies, you should definitely delay the

Bells Across America

In a celebration of citizenship, the Commission of the Bicentennial of the United State Constitution is calling on all Americans, especially organizations, institutions, and industries, to join in a "Ringing Tribute" to the Constitution on Thursday, September 17th at 4:00 p.m. EDT (3:00 p.m. CDT), the time of the actual signing of the Constitution 200 years ago.

To commemorate this historic event, Shiloh National Military Park in cooperation with the Bicentennial Commission, is asking anyone with bells, chimes, and carillons to sound them for 200 seconds beginning at 3:00 p.m. CDT. During this "ringing tribute" is an appropriate time for each American to reflect on the blessings of liberty, the ideals of justice, and the principle of equal opportunity made possible by the Constitution.

Organizations with no bells or chimes are urged to make special announcements, plan their own bicentennial celebrations, or conduct some type of commemorative event during this special time in

Dr. R. J. Brown Home

The home of the late Dr. R.J. Brown, known for the iron dogs, which were once placed on each side of the front doorsteps, is modified Greek type. From this home went the young husband and father to join the Confederacy in Roddy's command under Forrest. For some unusually daring adventure he was captured by Rosecrans and condemned to be shot as a spy. He was imprisoned in a tent in the backyard of the adjoining home where Rosecrans had his headquarters. Time and time again, his wife and the neighbor women besought Rosecrans on bended knees to spare his life, but to no avail. However, the night before he was to be shot the young officer, finding the guard asleep but still standing, managed to escape, slip through the garden of peavine hay (in which he got entangled) rush through canebreaks and swamps, and reached a country home three miles south, where he was given a horse and soon he regained his company. For this bold escape the master of the home where Rosecrans had his headquarters, was placed under strict guard for the remainder of the time the Federals occupied the town. The home presently belongs to Mrs. Ethel Childs.

The following correspondence was received by Mrs. Aline "Sis" Jackson August 28, 1987, from her brother, James Doan McRae II. The "Doan" referred to in the article was the great uncle of Mrs. Jackson, James Doan McRae II, and Ben McRae. Dear Sis,

This in reply to your question about the age of the Dr. Brown house. I have no idea of the age, but I will try to tell you what father and Dr. Brown told me in 1918-1919:

The Union Army had taken luka and one night a "Doan" (father's uncle-our great uncle) slipped in and was leading several Union Army horses out when he was captured. He was not in uniform so was tried as a horse thief and was given the death sentence. His mother &our great grandmother) begged the Union general to spare him but the sentence stood.He was locked in the back room of the Brown home (on Quitman) with a guard at the door. Somehow he got out a window and got to the creek south of the house and crept east until he was past the Union soldiers. Father and Dr. Brown said a Confederate veteran gave them this information. It is interesting.

A BEE-COMING BEARD Every year, beekeepers and their bees gather for a contest to determine who can "grow" the longest or most impressive beard of live honeybees --- and do so without swallowing a mouthful of stingers. According to National Wildlife magazine, a Pennsylvania State University student currently holds the record for the most bees piled on a person: He tipped the scales with some 20 pounds of bees!

Leeches are found all over the world, including some rather unlikely places. According to International Wildlife magazine, one species attaches itself to crocodile lips, while another lives in the nasal passages of wild ducks

The most prestigious of the old homes in luka is "Dunrobin" built by Robert Camshell Brinkley for his wife, Elizabeth Mhoon. This home is on Eastport Street, facing the Southern Railway. On this spot the Chief luka is supposed to have had his home. A small Indian mound to the west of the house is still plainly visible. After the advent of the white man, David Hubbard built his home there, fifteen years before the Town of luka was established. This first house, possibly a log structure, was torn away and the present house built in 1847. Romance played its part in this construction, when on their honeymoon Robert Campbell Brinkley and his bride were making a trip on the old stage coach which passed this site, the old coach line running right in front of where the present house stands. The young bride admired the location and said she wished she had a home built there. One year later"Dunrobin" (meaning castle) was built. During the war, General Grant had his headquarters in this house, and upon vacating it, he wrote the owners that he had taken good care of the property. In this home during the terrible epidemic of yellow fever in Memphis in 1878-79 when luka opened its doors to the stricken world, the trains bearing the victims who were sebarred from entering all other places, many were brought daily suffering from that disease and were nursed back to health in that home, as well as other homes of the town. Col. Brinkley died in 1878, but not of this disease. The house is pure Colonial architecture, the massive columns of the front porch were imported from Italy and the mantels are of Italian Marble. Mrs. W.J. Brinkley now lives in the ancestral home, which has served as both summer and year-round home for four generations of the Brinkley family.
