Dennen Steel Wins Supplier Award

Dennen Steel, located at Yellow Creek Port, is honored to be a recipient of the Steelcase 2013 Premier Suppliers Award. This is the first year for this award from Steelcase. The awards were announced on April 23, 2013 during the Steelcase Supplier Summit at the Grand Rapids Campus.

Dennen Steel has operations in 3 locations; Corporate Headquarters and 95,000 sq. ft. of operations in Grand Rapids, MI, 35,000 Sq. ft. of operations in Burns Harbor, IN and most recently the 50,000 sq. ft. facility in Iuka, MS at the Yellow Creek Port.

Dennen's strategic advantage is their business relationships with major steel mills and internal slitting operations that support stamping production. The YCP location uniquely positions Dennen to receive 35-ton master coils by barge from numerous southern steel mills.

Dennen Steel supplies a diverse customer market that includes; heavy truck, office furniture, appliance, agriculture and automotive.

The Premier Supplier Award is based on achievement of five goals set by Steelcase;

- Product Quality Rating of 195 to 200
- Green Quality Score for the entire year
- Contract Complete
- Strategic Supplier
- Book of Business over $250K

Dennen successfully achieved these goals for the 2013 Steelcase fiscal year. "Dennen is excited to receive this award during the first year of operation in Mississippi. We are off to a great start, to create a legacy of quality, service and trust with our customers," stated Chris Austin, Dennen Steel's Operation Manager at the YCP Facility.

New County Jail After One Year

State Inmate Program Helping County & Helping Pay for Jail

by Pamela McRae

The new Tishomingo County Jail has been open for a year and it is not only helping county communities through the state worker program, but the money the state is paying the county for state workers is helping pay off the debt for building the $5.2 million facility.

The county used to house about 25 prisoners who were being held on local charges (county inmates), but now they house 25-40 county inmates, as well as up to 80 state inmates who are serving time in the state worker program.

This week there are 51 state inmates and 23 county inmates (including 3 females and a mental inmate), though the number of state inmates fluctuates almost daily, explained Sheriff Glenn Whitlock in an interview Tuesday. Some are moved, complete their sentences or move for other reasons. The state and county inmates are in state-mandated separated facilities, for the safety of the state prisoners, who are all non-violent offenders; not always the case on the county side.

The state inmates must be non-violent offenders who are evaluated and approved by the state to serve their sentences at a minimum-security facility where they may participate in the state worker program. In Tishomingo County, this means helping the county, school district, municipalities, and non-profit groups with anything from mowing grass and garbage collection, to helping remodel the county courtroom and clean up after severe storms. In an interview with Sheriff Glenn Whitlock, he reported that the state inmates have logged at least 60,544 man hours of labor since last July, which is the equivalent of more than $400,000 if someone was paid minimum wage for the same work.

Of these hours worked, 17,672 were directly for the benefit of Tishomingo County, at the landfill, on supervisor road crews, garbage collection, and roadside cleanup. At the average salary of a supervisor crew employee, that would have cost the taxpayers $212,064, said Whitlock. He said that essentially represents the hours worked by 7.74 employees, whom the county doesn't have to pay.

The impact the workers have made is easy to see in towns around the county, where state inmates help with things like weed-eating and clean-up in preparation and after festivals, and through the year. It probably helps the inmates, as well, agreed the Sheriff, who said its better for them to be out helping, some of them even getting experience and learning skills that will help them when they complete their sentences.

"It's certainly better for them than sitting around bored, and discussing how to break the laws better next time," said Whitlock.

"They were a huge help with preparing for, and cleaning up after, the Sesquicentennial," said Battleground Commission Chairman Harold Lomenick of the workers' help during last year's massive effort to produce the commemoration of the Battle of Iuka, which drew 20,000 visitors to Iuka over Labor Day weekend. "It's a win-win for both sides: our people are already so busy doing Sesquicentennial stuff in addition to their home and family responsibilities, and the state workers need something to do."

State Pays

Each month, the county bills the State of Mississippi for the state inmates at a rate of $20 per day, whether they work in the work program or not. Whitlock reported that, as of June 30th, the county has billed the state $442,322. The state then sends the county the funds, which are put into the general fund, where they are distributed according to the supervisors' budget.

Is Jail Paying for Itself?

A major question when the Board of Supervisors voted (3-2) to build the new $5.2 millions jail with its state inmate section was, will it pay for itself?

The county's old jail was in poor condition, and the possibility of it passing required state inspections was diminishing. The county housed a few state inmates back then,

Luminaria lined the ground at Jaybird Park last year for the first Grand Illumination remembering those who died in the Battle of Iuka.

Grand Illumination August 30th Commemorating Those Who Died in Battle of Iuka

by Pamela McRae

Plans for the 151st commemoration of the Battle of Iuka this Labor Day weekend are ramping up, including the Grand Illumination, which honors the memory of the more than 1,900 troops who died as a result of the four-hour battle on September 19, 1862.

August 30th through September 1st of this year, Iuka will again commemorate the historic Battle of Iuka, which happened on one afternoon - September 19th, 1862 - on the hills south of town just a little north of where Highway 72 and Highway 25 intersect. More than 1,900 troops were killed in the battle, and Federal troops occupied Iuka after the fighting.

Friday night, August 30th, Jaybird Park will be filled with 1,900 luminaries in memory of soldiers on both sides who died in the Battle of Iuka. The event will begin about 6 p.m., when the band Lost Cause Confederate String Band will play in the gazebo. Everyone is invited to come enjoy the outdoor concert, and luminaries.

Several historical re-enactors will help bring our rich history to life over that weekend by portraying key personalities of the Civil War. This year Iuka welcomes President of the Confederacy Jefferson Davis, First Lady of the Confederacy Varina Davis, U.S. President Abraham Lincoln, U.S. General Ulysses S. Grant, and his wife Julia. Brigadier General Henry Little's great-great-grandson Fielding Tyler will dress as his ancestor, who was injured in the Battle and later died in the home now known as Twin Magnolias in Iuka. Local historian Dr. Ben Kitchens will be presenting as Governor John Marshall Stone, about whom Kitchens is writing a book.

The presidents and generals will come into Jaybird Park in carriages at 8 p.m. and will speak briefly to remember the sons, husbands, uncles and brothers who gave their lives in the historic battle.

IDEA (Iuka Development and Economic Association) is organizing the event, and they invite anyone who would like to come help set up the luminaries.

Friday, an estimated 800 students from all over the county will go to the Battlefield site for living history demonstrations featuring reenactment soldiers, as well as the living history performers.

There will be another chance to meet our living history personalities at the "Breakfast with the Presidents & Generals at Iuka Methodist Church Saturday morning.

and the facility had to meet state regulations and requirements for them to stay.

"Time was, you could say you didn't want to house state inmates, and kindly thumb your nose at state inspections," explained Whitlock. But as of July 2012, state laws put all the jails under the same scrutiny, and the potential threat of a lawsuit against the county, should an inmate get hurt or worse at the jail helped drive officials to push for a more updated facility.

At Board Meetings, the supervisors discussed extensively the potential income from a state inmate facility. With the state corrections officials reporting at the time they would pay counties or other incarceration facilities $20-35 per inmate per day, some board members held that a new jail would "pay for itself."

Designs for a new jail were solicited, and then rejected and downsized, when they exceeded the county's proposed budget. The final design, with its distinctive domed prisoner housing was estimated to cost $5.2 million for construction. The Board issued a bond for that amount, to be paid off by an additional 4.25 mills on county property taxes.

Additionally, the county took a loan for $500,000 to pay the architect, and furnish the facility.

According to county purchasing agent Lynn West, the millage collected has been sufficient to make the monthly payments to a Jail Bond Fund.

The funds received by the state for the state prisoners is put toward paying off the $500,000 for the architects and furnishing (Jail Facility Fund). West said that the larger part of the Jail Facility Fund is on schedule to be paid off this December, and then the state money will then be put toward paying off the Jail Bond Fund. The millage can be retired (tax removed) when there is sufficient funds to completely pay off the bond.

Don't Try This at Home!

We were camped on Pearson's Point. It was one of those early summer nights; still cool enough to need a sleeping bag. The lake was beautiful. Pickwick is never prettier than just at sunset. Odle and I were sitting there eating some fish we had caught and stoking the camp fire.

A friend of Odle's came up in a boat from the Alabama side. He had some beer. Odle showed him where the state line crossed the Point so he could stay out of Tishomingo County and not break the law. This was back when Tishomingo County was dry.

We visited for a while and he left just as the moon was coming up. The fire was going strong and cast a light over where we had our sleeping bags spread. It was just out of the corner of my eye that I saw something move in my sleeping bag. "Odle" I said, "watch that sleeping bag." Nothing happened for a minute or two, then it moved again, a slow sliding motion that was unmistakable. I kicked it and heard the low muffled sound of its tail shaking.

"Odle," I said, "you get your pistol and get ready."

I grabbed the end of the bag while he climbed up on the seat of his 3-wheeler and cocked the 22.

You need to be really careful when you are doing this; he might come out on his back confused and then he might come out coiled and ready. Don't try this at home, in fact, don't try this anywhere.

I won't again.

Worst case - he was locked a n d r e a d y when he hit the ground. But, so was ole d e a d e y e O d l e D a v i s and he nailed him right between the eyes. Nine rattles and a but-ton, we dressed him. Odle said he was going to make a hat band. I don't know that he ever did.

We fried it up the next morning with some streak-o-lean. Rattlesnake and scrambled eggs is not a bad combination.

If you are camping, watch for snakes.

Booming on the Battlefield at Shiloh

On Saturday, July 27, the Shiloh Artillery Crew will be presenting cannon firing demonstrations at Shiloh Battlefield. The crew will be firing the park's 6-pounder smoothbore cannon, a gun which saw its first battles during the Mexican-American War in 1846-48. "There were more 6-pounders at Shiloh than any other type of cannon," said Park Ranger Joe Davis. "Nearly forty percent of the big guns in this battle were 6-pounders," Davis noted, "with fifty-six being used by the Confederate batteries and forty being used by the Union forces."

The cannon firing demonstrations will take place at 11:00 am, 1:30 pm, and 3:00 pm on Saturday across from the park's Visitor Center. Each program will last approximately 30-minutes, and interpret the weapon, its projectiles, and the procedures Civil War artillery crews used to fire the gun during the war. As always, these demonstrations are free and open to the public.

The Visitor Center and bookstore at Shiloh Battlefield will be open during normal operating hours from 8:00 am to 5:00 pm. The Shiloh movie, Shiloh: The Battle, is shown in the Visitor Center on the hour beginning at 8:00 am with the last showing at 4:00 pm daily. For more information please contact the park visitor center at 731-689-5696, visit the park website at www.nps.gov/shiloh, or find us on Facebook at www.facebook.com/ShilohNMP.

Pet of the Week

CONGRATULATIONS to Cookie Carns!! This cutie pie is our Pet of the Week at Iuka Animal Clinic. This is what she has to say: "Hello, my name is Cookie Carns. I am a 5 1/2 year old Pomeranian. I own two humans. My mom is Donna Carns and my grandmother is Elsie Joyner. My little brother is named Little Bit and he is a Chihuahua. I love riding with Mom and sticking my head out of the sunroof. I also love my purple blanket, squeaky toys and riding in Grandmother's wheelchair. My favorite human friends are Dr. Jim (he takes great care of me) and Heidi (she clips and bathes me)." Join Dr. Perkins and staff in congratulating Cookie as our Pet of the Week.

We do pet boarding and can do dentals, vaccinations, or grooming while they are here with us. This can save you an extra trip and we will take excellent care of them while you are away. Fleas and ticks can get the best of you and your pet if you are not proactive with prevention on a monthly basis. It is much more economical to prevent these pests than to try to get rid of them once they have moved in.

Call Iuka Animal Clinic (Dr. Perkins & Staff) @ 662-423-3470 for all your needs where "Pets Are Family, Too."

Blakney Grandson Nick Eveland's High School Transformation Inspiring

Editor's note: Nick Eveland is the oldest grandson of Burns-ville residents Alvia and Barbara Blakney, who were kind enough to direct us to this inspiring story. We hope you enjoy it as much as we did. It appeared in The Herald of Everett, Washington.

By Eric Stevick,
Herald writer
Snohomish, WA

If Nick Eveland felt anxiety, it didn't show. He was a model of equanimity: his expression calm, almost serene.

There was an ease in his gait that defied his awkwardness as he climbed the stairs to the Comcast Arena stage and met the gaze of 4,000 people waiting for him to say something.

Nick, who has autism, did not lock eyes with anyone. He knew better.

Nick thinks in musical patterns. His brain is a jukebox with a seemingly endless playlist. Familiar faces are like quarters dropped into the slot. Nick naturally composes and stores melodies for the people he gets to know. Their tunes play back in his mind each time he sees them. The musical bookmarks help him tell how people are feeling.

If Nick recognizes too many faces at once, the dissonance can overwhelm him.

On graduation night, Nick could not risk the sensory overload.

His eyes found safe pockets within the crowd.

Nick was one of three seniors selected by the Glacier Peak High School Class of 2013 to speak on their behalf at commencement.

His presence at the podium was remarkable in many ways.

Midway through his junior year, his classmates knew little about him. He rarely had no friends. In some ways, he'd been a phantom whose lone head shot in the yearbook documented that he was, indeed, a student at Glacier Peak.

By design, Nick walked the halls when they were empty. His brain wasn't wired to handle the din of 1,600 students coursing through the corridors. Likewise, he stayed away from the cafeteria and all-school assemblies.

Sometimes, he'd put on his headphones and flick the noise cancellation switch to block out the cacophony around him.

For more than two years, all had been a weary trudge over the lonely teen.

Then he blossomed.

"To watch him evolve over the course of time into the person he was at graduation, that was something you watch in the movies," teacher Teri Corwin said. "It is not something you see in real life."

Fittingly, the theme of Nick's flawlessly delivered commencement speech was "Change."

Perhaps no one in his senior class had changed more in four years than Nick Eveland.

Autism can be perplexing, vexing, fascinating, exasperating and most certainly heartbreaking for parents whose children fall within the spectrum of complex neurodevelopmental disorders.

When a baby is born, there are no obvious signs that something might be amiss.

Instead, autism creeps up on unsuspecting families over weeks, months and years, and dashes dreams.

The autism spectrum is immeasurable in its depth and breadth and as unique as each of the millions of people it encompasses. The most profoundly affected require a lifetime of round-the-clock care. Others, such as animal science professor Temple Grandin, are brilliant. Grandin describes herself as a visual thinker with a brain that operates like Google Images.

English writer Daniel Tammet is an autistic savant who thinks in numbers and once recited pi from memory to 22,514 digits in a little more than five hours. In his mind, numbers have their own shape, color and feel.

It is no wonder then that Nick's dad, Peter Eveland, likes to say: "If you have met one autistic child, you have met one autistic child."

For Peter and Vicki Eveland, both academics with doctorates, the reality that their oldest son was different from his peers began to sink in when Nick was in kindergarten alongside other children his age. They noticed little things as first: his weak motor skills, his struggle with scissors, his poor handwriting, his lack of understanding social rules.

It was worrisome enough that the Evelands consulted with a developmental pediatrician who referred Nick to a psychologist for evaluation. The written report had a long list of medical conditions including depression, obsessive behavior and sensory integration disorder.

Vicki kept returning to three particularly troubling words: pervasive developmental disorder.

She learned that many people on the autistic spectrum are first diagnosed as having PDD.

Their pediatrician crossed out the psychologist's diagnosis. He explained that he didn't agree. He didn't want Nick labeled.

The couple began taking Nick to an occupational therapist to help him improve his fine motor skills and tackle his difficulty swallowing.

"I see all kinds of autistic kids, and he is on the spectrum somewhere," the therapist told Vicki.

In the waiting room, the mother of an autistic boy offered her assessment: "Your child is Asperger's, right? I see all the signs."

Just like that, a complete stranger stated what doctors were reluctant to conclude. Sure enough, Nick later was diagnosed as having Asperger's syndrome, an autism spectrum disorder that includes many of the social and behavioral impairments of autism, except for difficulties with language.

"I knew he had some health issues, but putting the name autism to it was very scary to me," Vicki said. "In your mind, you think you are going to have this perfect child. I was in such a panic. I just wanted to stick my head in the sand."

The Evelands worked hard with Nick. They got him help and sought a balance in their expectations.

Nick was 10 years old when he learned to tie his shoelaces.

In middle school in Florida, he was a target for teasing and often cried at home when no one was around.

Nick was 13 when his mother decided it was the right time to break the news to him that he has autism.

He didn't cry or complain. For weeks, he just asked questions, wanting to know more.

"I always kind of felt that I was a little off, but I never thought that I was different," Nick told classmates in April. "You don't think you are different until you are told you are, I guess."

The family moved to Snohomish County in 2009. His freshman year at Glacier Peak was supposed to be a clean start for Nick.

He lasted just three days before the ache inside his belly became unbearable. Gastrointestinal disorders are common among people on the autistic spectrum, and Nick had suffered greatly over the years.

That October, Nick was admitted to Seattle Children's Hospital. The muscles around his intestines would tighten so hard he couldn't pass waste.

Nick winced at the slightest touch. Traditional treatments failed. Nick became increasingly withdrawn.

"We were on the brink of losing him," said Peter Eveland, former dean of students for the University of Washington School of Medicine.

Eventually, a pain specialist made inroads with Nick. He taught him how to shut down the part of the brain that transmitted pain signals. He convinced him he must "cowboy up" and tough it out.

On Dec. 4, nearly three months into his freshman year, Nick was well enough to return to class.

The quirky new kid was hopelessly disconnected.

"I just wanted to shrink up within myself," he said.

The staff looked for ways to help him through the school day.

They brought him into the main office and introduced him to Sandy Brandt, who works at the front desk.

Nick was told that Brandt would be his lunch buddy.

Initially, Brandt did the talking for them both. Nick would eat his peanut butter sandwich in silence and stare down at the blue carpet.

They ate lunch together for three years.

Over time, obligatory two-word responses turned into sentences and sentences became conversations. It was always a progression of baby steps.

For a long time, it was easier for Nick to get to know his teachers and staff rather than his peers.

Stefanie Celix had Nick in a learning strategies class his freshman year.

Once, she mentioned she liked the characters in "Cars," an animated movie.

A couple of days later, Nick handed her a picture he had drawn at home of Lightning McQueen, a red race car.

Nick had reached out. Celix was ecstatic.

"I was trying not to appear overly excited, but inside you want to jump up and down and hug him," she said.

Four years later, Nick's drawing still hangs in her classroom.

In the Dr. Seuss classic "Horton Hears a Who," an affable elephant in the Jungle of Nool hears a faint yelp for help coming from a floating speck of dust.

The tiny particle is home to a village of Whos too small to be seen. Only a big-eared, kind-hearted elephant can hear their cries.

In his junior year, Nick was cast as a Who from Whoville in the Glacier Peak production of "Seussical the Musical." It was not a major part, by any means, but it was plenty challenging for a novice with autism who feared his steep learning curve could burden the rest of the cast.

In some ways, it was the perfect role: Nick knew what it was like to feel invisible.

Nick agreed to try out for the play at the urging of his English teacher, Patti Wade, who also taught drama. He liked to talk with her about his favorite musicals.

Wade was aware that Nick had a high-functioning form of autism. She also knew he was smart and she'd heard that he could sing.

"Gradually, he had been coming out of the shell," Wade said. "I saw the potential in him and I wanted him to give it a try."

Nick's instinct was to politely decline, but he fought that impulse. There was something "so welcoming" in his teacher's approach, he couldn't say no.

Darren Oke directed the production. He'd been told that Nick had autism and no acting experience. He saw enough in him for an ensemble role in the chorus. He grew to like the boy who largely kept to himself when he wasn't on stage.

At least once a week, Nick would thank Oke for putting him in the cast and ask how he could do better.

Erin Wygant played Gertrude McFuzz, a leading role in "Seussical." Popular, confident and beautiful, she had been singing and acting for years.

One day, when Wygant was sitting in the audience at a dress rehearsal, she found her eyes drawn again and again to a bold and boisterous figure with wonderful facial expressions. The boy was in the background.

"Who is this kid?" she thought to herself. "He is so good."

They might have been going to the same school for nearly three years, but Wygant had no idea who Nick was. At Glacier Peak, Nick had been as invisible as a Who.

Offstage, the animated boy was quiet, reserved and awkward.

"It was shocking to see the different sides," she said. "The paradox is huge."

After another rehearsal, the cast was listening to the director's feedback. Wygant's thoughts drifted. She began thinking of her grandfather, who had recently died. Tears rolled down her cheeks.

Somebody placed a crumpled Kleenex on her knee.

"Don't worry," Nick said. "I haven't used it."

Nick Eveland made a friend that day.

"That moment I will not forget," Wygant said.

Other cast members also were taking a liking to the autistic boy who was just grateful to be a small part of something special.

"You really appreciate someone with his pluck and attitude about things and that really grew on everybody," Oke said. "What I noticed about him personally is he had a sensitive and kind personality."

In his peach overalls, baby blue cap and curly mustache, he became a marvelous Who.

One night after a performance, the cast met at an Applebee's. Nick showed up with his mother and brother, Tyler, who played in the orchestra. Tyler wandered off to hang with friends, leaving Nick and his mom in a booth.

That's when Dana Brager, a lead in the play, told Nick the cast hoped he would join them at their table.

Nick wandered off.

Vicki Eveland sat alone, overjoyed.

That April, Nick received an invitation to "Be The Change" day. The program aimed at building a sense of community within the school. It was a chance for students to have heart-to-heart conversations about the challenges they face.

"I thought maybe this would be the place where I could say the sad stuff I needed to say," Nick said. "I felt like these people wanted me to go, that people were actually reaching out to me."

Nick flagged down John Bonner, a history teacher, and warned him he might leave if he became too anxious.

The students were divided into groups. Nick ended up in one with Bonner's daughter, Katherine, a striking young woman with long, flowing blond hair. Nick had long admired her from afar.

Nick did not hold back.

He talked about what it was like to live with autism, his daily struggles making simple connections with people, the help he needed learning how to make friends.

"I don't want to be alone anymore," he confided.

His classmates embraced him, hugging him that day and thereafter.

"He opened the door for us to be a part of his life," Katherine Bonner said.

Nick had plunged head-first into life's deep end and discovered that he could swim.

In his senior year, he won a lead role in the fall production of "13 Past Midnight." He portrayed the deliciously villainous Victor Winslow. Wygant, who was the fall homecoming queen, played his wife and wondered how a such a warm and down-to-earth boy could pull off the part of such a horrible man.

Armed with his headphones to muffle the chaos, Nick attended his first football games. He joined clubs, became a loyal fan of the girls' basketball team and left encouraging notes to staff and his classmates.

He also wrote a list of senior year goals. After three years, he broke the news to Brandt that he was ready to eat lunch with his classmates. She was thrilled.

Nick enrolled in a leadership class during his final semester because one of his goals was to do something that really mattered. He convinced Corwin and the school administration to let him host a special presentation during National Autism Awareness Month.

Nick created a video asking students and teachers what they knew and didn't know about autism. He included slides that dispelled myths.

As Nick's big day approached, he began to fret, wondering whether anyone besides a smattering of his leadership classmates would show up. It was, after all, taking place during a free period. No one was required to be there.

The performing arts center was packed.

More than 460 people streamed into the auditorium; others spilled into the hallway.

There was Nick on stage alone wearing a hand-lettered sign across his chest that read: "Different, but not less."

He described how his brain can get overwhelmed by sights and sounds, how he has trouble processing abstract concepts and often takes things too literally, how he can be too blunt and oblivious to social cues.

It was then that he explained how his brain thinks in musical patterns, how just by looking at someone, their tune pops into his head.

He noticed Corwin smile and sang her melody for all to hear. Tears streamed down his teacher's face and those of the people around her.

His talk ended in an ovation.

Nick had one last item to strike from his list of senior year goals.

He had asked Katherine Bonner if she wouldn't mind previewing the slides and video presentation before his autism talk.

They had become friends since the "Be The Change" day the year before, and she had been voted student body president her senior year.

Bonner read each slide carefully for typos.

The last one blindsided her. It read: "Will you go to prom with me?"

She emailed Nick her answer: Yes.

"I was humbled when he asked me," she said. "He is someone in the school who is admired. Nick is everyone else's advocate."

Nick really hadn't expected her to say yes.

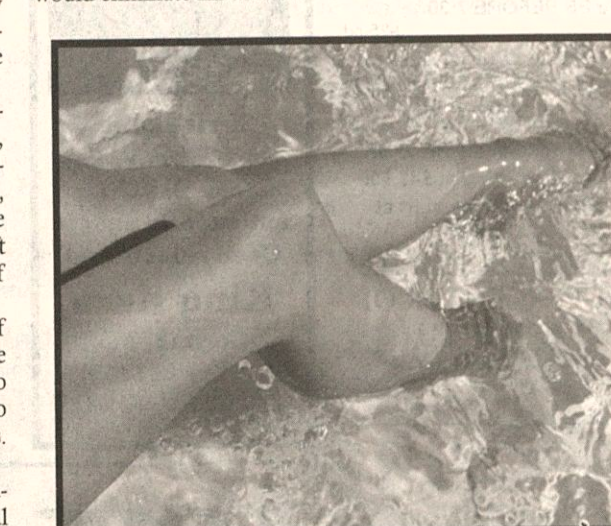

"Katherine is so perfect at a lot of things," he said. "I was afraid to ask anyone. I had to keep thinking who would be a friend who I could trust who would at least be nice about saying 'no.'"

His brother Tyler, who is as socially smooth as Nick is awkward, said he was proud of his courage. He then asked Nick if he knew how to slow dance. Nick had not thought that far ahead.

Tyler took one of Nick's hands and brought the other to his waist.

The brothers, 19 and 16, slow-danced across the kitchen floor.

Nick sometimes wonders what he would do if he could just take a pill that would eliminate his autism.

Mississippi's 2013-14 Dove Seasons Announced

JACKSON - The Commission on Wildlife, Fisheries, and Parks has approved dates for the 2013-14 dove season. The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service provides a "window" of dates from which states may select specific season dates. The 2013-14 dove season will be similar to previous seasons with a few minor changes.
Once again, Mississippi hunters will enjoy a 70-day, 15-bird daily bag limit for mourning and white-winged doves for the 2013-14 season. The possession limit is three times the daily bag limit. Mississippi is divided into two zones to maximize hunting opportunities throughout the state. The North Dove Zone is defined as areas north of U.S. Hwy. 84, plus areas south of U.S. Hwy. 84 and west of MS Hwy. 35. Season dates for the North Zone are as follows: Sept. 1-22; Oct. 12-Nov. 4; and Dec. 20-Jan. 12. The South Dove Zone is defined as areas south of U.S. Hwy. 84 and east of MS Hwy. 35. Season dates for the South Zone are as follows: Sept. 1-9; Oct. 5-Nov. 4; and Dec. 14-Jan. 12. The season will open at 2 p.m. on Sept. 1 for both dove zones.
"The opening day of dove season is one of the most popular hunting dates of the year," said James Callicutt, Mississippi Department of Wildlife, Fisheries, and Parks Waterfowl Program Biologist. The MDWFP provides an abundance of public dove hunting opportunities on many state Wildlife Management Areas as well as on private lands.
